

Most Influential Women IN RADIO

Claudia Puig
SVP/Eastern Regional Manager
Univision Radio

It has been a combination of determination, hard work, and surrounding myself with the right people. It's important to interview your prospective manager as much as they interview you, especially in sales. Great managers can be great mentors, and I've learned from some of the best in our industry. I've worked the longest for those who mirror my values, yet challenge and encourage me to stretch and grow. Change is exciting to me, and I try to lead by example.

While bad days are tough, they almost always teach you something. I think that's valuable. Adversity and challenge are great motivators. The key is to not dwell on the negativity. Learn from the situation and move on.

You walk up to the podium and ask the women in the audience if they want to pursue a career that challenges them to think outside the box, that will never be the same every day, that has been and will continue to be integrally tied to the hearts and minds of its users, listeners, clients, and community, and that makes a difference on a daily basis. A career that is limited only by your imagination and desire to succeed. A career in an industry that is re-forming to remain relevant to the audience it serves, is personally rewarding, where you get to work with great people, and is fun. Then step right up! We need you in radio.

Great Local Radio isn't a corporate mandate.
It's a passion of each broadcaster in our company.

It's who we are.
